At a time of volatile energy prices, unrest in major oil-producing countries, and growing concern about the environment, becoming more energy-efficient is a prudent way to manage both our budget and our responsibility for the impact of our energy use.

Attend this informative, hands-on workshop to gain the tools and knowledge to evaluate four essential areas of energy usage in houses of worship:

- Electricity – how to recognize the major “energy hogs” and what to do about them
- Heat, air conditioning – is it time for an upgrade?
- Building structure – what tasks can make your congregation more comfortable and save money?
- Behavior – how simple actions can reduce your energy bill and carbon footprint by 10%

The workshop will be conducted by the Massachusetts Interfaith Power & Light which has conducted over 100 assessments of houses of worship. This depth of experience makes them uniquely qualified to provide practical tips and information that you can use to understand your energy use and identify projects to reduce your costs. Participants in the workshop will receive instructions, forms to guide them in assessing their house of worship and tools to gather needed information
